“Mawage. Mawage is wot bwings us togeder tooday. Mawage, that bwessed awangment, that dweam wifin a dweam...And wuv, tru wuv, will fowow you fowevea...So tweasure your wuv.”

For those of us who grew up in the era of the iconic movie The Princess Bride, this quote is legendary. It comes toward the end of the movie when Princess Buttercup is forced to marry the evil Prince Humperdinck instead of her true love, Westley. The priest's lisp and demeanor make a sad scene comedic. For those of you who have never seen the movie, I will not give away the ending, but just say it is worth watching!

Marriage is what will bring my family and Mike's family together in Cleveland at the beginning of April. Our wedding, in particular, and the marriage that will follow, are awesome and surreal experiences to anticipate. My emotions have been on a roller coaster for the last 13 months. It is joyous to know that I have found the one person with whom I want to share my life. It is great fun to talk and dream about our future, and to discuss our hopes and aspirations. Yet, it is a bit scary and overwhelming to anticipate the changes that will occur, and to know that my position in the world will be shifting. My primary position in my family will not be as my parent's daughter or my brother's sister, but as Mike's partner. No longer will I be a Gertman; I will be a Hartman. My decisions are no longer mine alone to make.

Judaism understands the importance of these liminal moments, these times when we transition from one category to another. This is why we have markers, celebrations and rites of passage to commemorate the occasion and usher us from one state to another. In addition, I have found that wedding planning helps with this. I am sure that this is not what you would expect a rabbi to say (!), but I have come to realize that the process of planning a wedding is a wonderful way for a couple to uncover and uplift their true values and those of their families. It is easy to be caught up in the “industry” that weddings have become; it is a test of one's inner strength to resist the many costly ideas and suggestions that are regularly directed to a bride and groom. If a couple can resist the hype and the marketing and stay true to their vision, then what emerges is a true expression of the couple. It has been a wonderful journey to take with Mike as we have clarified our goals, compromised on our ideas, and hopefully begun our journey towards becoming truly and authentically “us.” It has also been an experience that gives me new perspective as a rabbi, as I assist future couples on their journey to the chuppah. The challenges and the rewards of wedding planning have been worth every moment.

Thank you for sharing in our happiness and joy. We are very much looking forward to celebrating our marriage with all of you on Friday, May 20. We hope that you will be able to join us at Temple Israel for Erev Shabbat service and a special Oneg that evening. B'virkat Shalom—With Blessings of Peace,

Rabbi Jennifer S. Gertman

Topping Off Ceremony

On Wednesday, February 24, congregants, neighbors, clergy and staff joined Mortenson Construction in celebrating a milestone of the building process: placing the final beam of the steel frame. Members of our whole community, including our interfaith clergy friends and our religious school students, added their names to the beam before watching it be installed. Be sure to watch the inspiring video of the event on our website, www.templeisrael.com/construction-updates.

Honoring Our Pillars

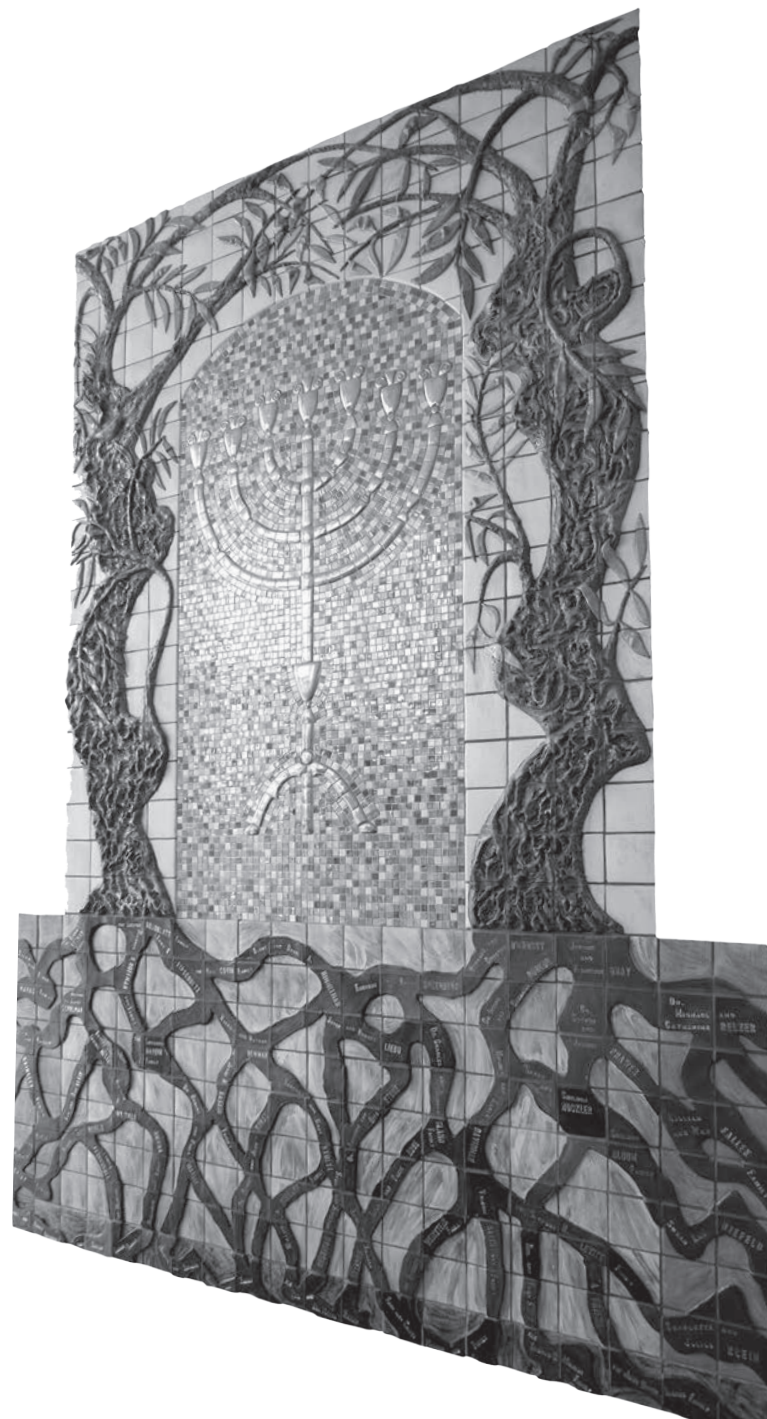

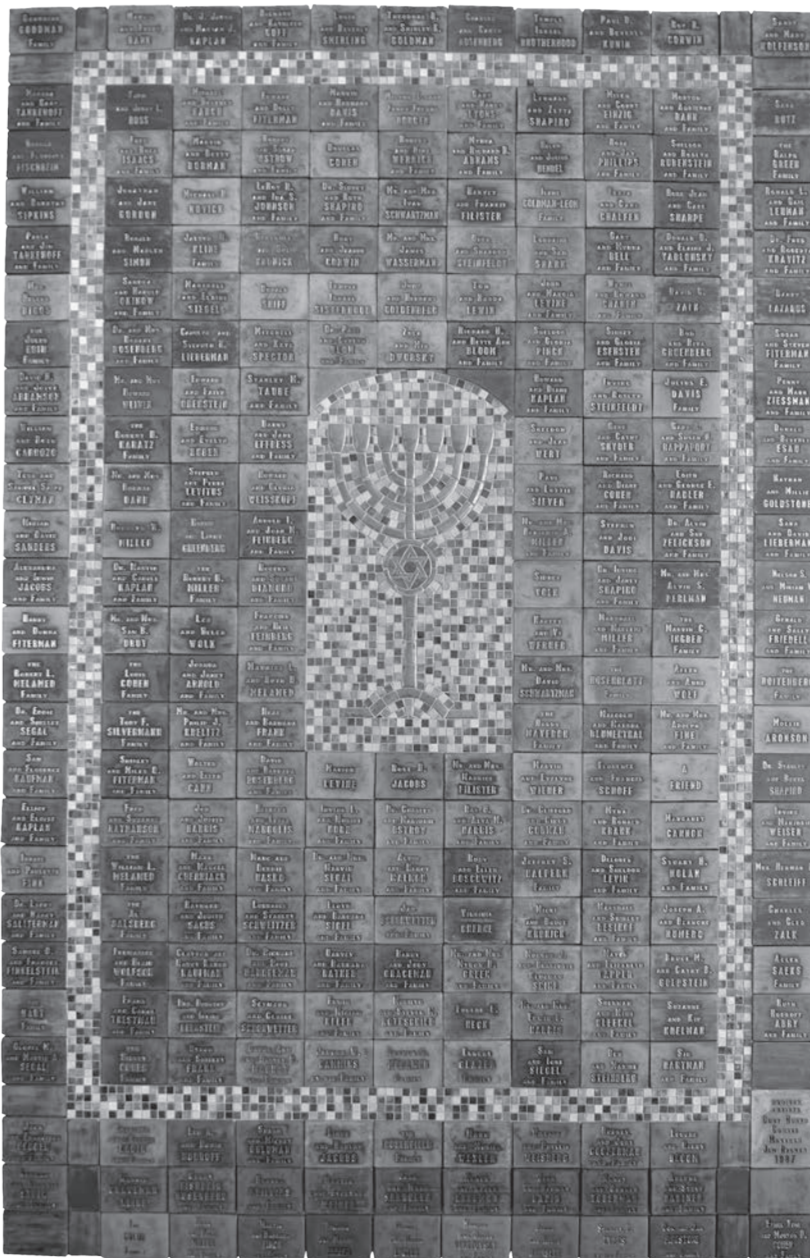

*“Who is honored?
He that honors mankind.”
—Avot 4:1*

The beautiful mosaics on the lobby walls have greeted our congregation since the 1980s. These mosaics honored families who supported Temple’s 1986 Building Campaign, and we are so grateful to them for their dedication and commitment to Temple. If not for their generosity, Temple Israel would not be where it is today.

As part of our newly designed and expanded building, under construction now, the old lobby walls will be removed.

Unfortunately, the fragile ceramic tiles were affixed so firmly to the walls that it was not possible to keep them intact as they were taken down.

The names displayed on the mosaic tiles, and all the names of the supporters of the 1986 Building Campaign, will be inscribed on a new historic donor wall so that future generations of Temple can see the true meaning of L’Dor Vador—from generation to generation.
